AUTHOR BIOGRAPHICAL NOTES (IN ORDER OF APPEARANCE)

Brian Powell is James H. Rudy Professor, Co-Director of the Preparing Future Faculty program, and Chair of the Department of Sociology at Indiana University–Bloomington. He recently completed his term as vice president of the American Sociological Association (ASA). He also has served as chair of the Social Psychology Section and the Sociology of Education section of the ASA and as deputy editor for American Sociological Review, Sociology of Education, and the Journal of Health and Social Behavior. Professor Powell focuses his research on family sociology, sociology of education, gender, and social psychology. He has been the recipient of multiple research awards, including the North Central Sociological Association Scholarly Achievement Award, the Midwest Sociological Society's Distinguished Book Award, the ASA Family Section's Goode Book Award, the ASA Sex and Gender Section's Distinguished Article Award, the ASA Section on Emotion's Recent Contribution Award, and the ASA Section on Aging and Life Course's Outstanding Publication Award. His book Counted Out: Same-Sex Relations and Americans' Definitions of Family (Russell Sage Foundation, 2010, 2012), coauthored with IU PhDs Catherine Bolzendahl and Claudia Geist and with Lala Carr Steelman from the University of South Carolina, moves beyond previous efforts to understand how Americans view their own families by examining the way Americans characterize the concept of family in general. In addition, he is exploring Americans' views regarding the role of parents, children, and the government in college funding.

Dr. Kathy Bohley Martin is a professor of international business and marketing in the University of Indianapolis School of Business. She has taught for almost two decades at UIndy and has received numerous teaching, service, and scholarship awards, including best paper at a conference on three separate occasions. Dr. Bohley Martin has been awarded more than 20 grants, twice nominated for teacher of the year, and awarded Outstanding Advisor of the Year for a student organization. Moreover, she has presented more than 100 times at conferences and workshops and has published numerous articles in international peer-reviewed journals.

Dr. Chris Harris is an associate professor of supply chain management in the University of Indianapolis School of Business. His research and teaching interests focus on lean supply chain production systems. Dr. Harris has taught seminars on lean principles and assisted companies in implementing lean production systems throughout the world. He is the author of numerous articles and several books on lean production, including Capitalizing on Lean Production Systems to Win New Business, Lean Supplier Development, Lean Connections: Making Information Flow Efficiently and Effectively, and Developing a Lean Workforce, all published by Productivity Press, and Making Materials Flow, published by the Lean Enterprise Institute, which won the Shingo Research Prize for Excellence in Manufacturing Research in 2005. He holds an MBA and a DBA with a major in management from Anderson University in Anderson, Indiana, as well as a master's of science degree in youth development leadership from Clemson University.

Dr. Tyler Council worked for several years in the private environmental laboratory industry as a quality control and assurance manager before becoming the head of Oakland City University's Criminal Justice Department. His focus on forensic testing in the environmental setting made for a natural transition to the educational realm, where he has continued pursuing interests with respect to novel forensic tools in his research ever since. Currently, Dr. Council has several publications in peer-reviewed journals that highlight the use of RNA as a new molecular target to augment current DNA-focused identification efforts with respect to individual identification, as well as to supplant traditional reagent-based bodily fluid analysis techniques. The latest publication alluding to this avenue of research can be found in the Spring 2014 edition of the Journal for the Liberal Arts and Sciences.

Dr. Donna McLean is an associate professor of communication arts at Indiana University Kokomo. She teaches a wide variety of communication classes, including Communication Theory, and Intercultural Communication. She also directs an international studies minor, teaching the gateway class, an international issues course. The minor, as well as overseas study classes, have led to her interest in international indices of well-being. She is also interested in advocacy rhetoric and is currently exploring the rhetorical strategies of the Canadian Indigenous Idle No More movement.

Dr. Joseph Ferrandino is Assistant Professor of Criminal Justice in the School of Public and Environmental Affairs (SPEA) at Indiana University Northwest. He has published in numerous academic journals, focusing specifically on the efficiency/productivity of criminal justice systems and organizations as well as the intersection of new governance and criminal justice. He also serves as a data analyst for 15 Indiana public safety agencies and administers the Northwest Indiana Public Safety Data Consortium (NWIPSDC).

Author of numerous articles and books, Dr. Randy Mills is a professor of the social sciences at Oakland City University in Oakland City, Indiana, and editor of the Journal for the Liberal Arts and Sciences. His research interest includes the culture and history of the southern tier of the Old Northwest Territory. Dr. Mills has been the recipient of several writing grants, including two Clio Grants from the Indiana Historical Society. He was a keynote speaker at the IASS annual conference and received the IASS George C. Roberts Award in 2006. Dr. Mills's book on Indiana's first governor was a finalist for Best Books in Indiana in the nonfiction category.

Scooter Pégram is Associate Professor of Modern Languages and Minority Studies at Indiana University Northwest. Scooter has extensive experience researching subjects relating to youth from immigrant and ethnocultural communities in the Francophone world, which is his primary area of expertise. He has published numerous journal articles and a book, all of which bear upon topics regarding identity, acceptance, racism, integration, gender, and language. Currently, he is investigating the juxtaposition of language and identity as featured in French-language hip-hop music. A sociolinguist by training, he is from Québec, is well-traveled, and speaks several languages fluently.

Dr. Kathleen Tobin is Associate Professor of History in the Department of History and Political Science at Purdue University Calumet. She currently teaches Latin American and United States history. Her recent research addresses population issues and birth control history, and she published an article entitled “Population Density and Housing in Port-au-Prince: Historical Construction of Vulnerability” in the Journal of Urban History in November 2013.

Jim Thomas, CPA, EdD, is an assistant clinical professor of accounting at Indiana University Northwest’s School of Business and Economics. He earned his MBA at Northern Illinois University and his EdD at Indiana University. His research interests include student ethical development, international financial reporting standards, federal taxation, and community engagement.

Steve Dunphy is an associate professor of management at Indiana University Northwest’s School of Business and Economics. He earned his MBA from the Wharton School at the University of Pennsylvania and his PhD in management from the Kelley School at Indiana University. His research interests are in entrepreneurship, strategy, and small group development.

Jeffrey Allen is a graduate student at Indiana University Northwest pursuing a Master of Public Affairs degree with a Health Services Administration concentration. He holds a Bachelor of Liberal Studies (health sciences concentration) and Associate of Applied Science (HRI) from Purdue University and aspires to complete a PhD in health promotion. His first lengthy career was in restaurant management and sales for 20 years before shifting his focus to the deleterious effects of obesity and physical inactivity. He has been published in Portals, a Purdue University NC journal, twice and has directed his educational pursuits to improve health promotion research in vulnerable populations.
